

CHAPTER II

A new voice broke into the proceedings at that point. From some where high on the rock ledge above the trail a man yelled, "Get that mail sack down and shake it up! Get the chure done!"

The smaller bandit stirred restlessly but did not take his attention away from the three people in front of him. He even contrived a sneaking little bow as he addressed the girl. "Sorry to bother ye like this, ma'am. I reckon ye kin git back into the wagon."

He waved his gun airily as he spoke and turned his attention to the stage driver, ordering the little man to toss the mail bag to the ground. The bag came down, accompanied by the bristling comments of the outraged officer, and once more the two bandits went into whispered conference. Oodly though they seemed most interested in the contents of the wallet which had been taken from the older passenger. Even more odd was the way they ignored the sheet of yellow-backed bills and studied the cards and papers which were there.

Bandits Wantonly Shoot 'Neat Little Stranger'

The voice on the high rocks came again, steadily urging. "Use yer eyes, ye loco numbskulls. The fancy one, Git him!" Suddenly the pair by the trail started back toward the coach, the larger bandit lagging back a little and keeping his gun aimed in the general direction of the driver. The smaller gunman was within two paces of the standing trio when he barked, "Don't pull that gun!" The words faded under the blast of his six-shooter, two quick shots booming in rapid succession.

The girl screamed once, but choked it off quickly as the bandit turned his bronze and galloped for the shelter of the ledge. His companion matched the action, delaying only to fire a warning shot over the head of the driver. In a matter of seconds both men were out of sight, leaving behind them the sprawling form of the pompous little traveler.

Frazer made two quick moves when he realized that the bandit was going to shoot. His violent shove sent the girl staggering away from the center of action just as the gun roared, then he sprang forward grimly, intending to make one desperate effort to pull the gunman from the saddle. The plan miscarried with a whizzing pull whirled and retreated so hastily.

Frowning perplexedly he turned to look down at the man who had been the target for those two unprovoked bullets. The smaller traveler had collapsed in a heap against one of the coach's rear wheels, his body almost in a sitting position. The sag of the head and the bloody shirt front told the story, however. The man was dead, two bullets having driven squarely into his heart.

There was nothing to be done for him, so Frazer swung to face the girl. She had gone down as a result of his shove but was up again now, limping a little but interested in the fate of the unfortunate man against the wheel. She knelt quickly beside the dead man, picking up one of the limp white hands to feel for a faint pulse.

"He's no longer there," she said, which was no longer there. At that instant the stage driver unlimbered his ancient forty-four and slammed three angry, useless shots at the distant outlaw. It was merely a gesture, but the shots started the team into lunging forward. As the wheel turned it threw the dead man against the kneeling girl.

It was too much, even for her determined nerve. She uttered a little exclamation of horror and sprang backward, the color ebbing from her cheeks. Frazer saw her away as she came erect and he stopped in quickly, his arm going round her just as she faltered. He was still holding her, uncertain as to what he should do next, when the driver dematerialized down to the ground. The little man's eyes widened in a deeper concern as he saw the girl's limp form. "Did she git it?" he began, all of his fury dissolving before a frank worry.

"She fainted," Frazer told him. Then he remembered the little man's defiance and repeated the statement more loudly.

The sound seemed to rouse the girl—and annoy her. She opened her eyes quickly and tried to wiggle out of Frazer's arms. "Let me alone," she said sharply. "I'm all right."

He knelt beside the body and went gingerly through the pockets of the now dusty pepper-and-salt suit. The search disclosed nothing but a new deck of cards, some loose coins and a small black notebook. The book contained no names, nothing but a series of figures which seemed to be an expense account. So he put everything back where he had found it, standing up to find the girl's dark eyes intent upon him.

He knew he should keep his own role as inconspicuous as possible, but he could not forbear asking a question. "Are you sure you don't know who this man was?"

She shook her head. "Of course not. Couldn't you tell by the questions he was asking that he was a stranger?"

"He sounded like it—but I can't understand why he was killed if you decided why he was killed," he said. "But I'm sure he was a stranger. It must be that the murderers were also strangers to the region."

"But they knew about Pete's death," he pointed out. "And I'd bet that the big man is someone you would recognize."

"How do you make that out?" he flashed, her resentment almost as quick as the driver's had been back into the wagon.

Frazer smiled faintly. "Think back. The big man was noisy enough at the start. He was giving the orders. Then he discovered that you were in the coach. So he

Dan Frazer Sizes Up Town of Mesa Verde

Frazer wanted to swear. There was precious little that he knew about the situation into which he was heading, but one of his bits of information indicated that a major source of trouble was a storekeeper named Bartoli. That made everything just fine. He was going into Mesa Verde in disguise—and already Bartoli's daughter had penetrated that disguise.

"Still he kept his wit about him. Glad to know you," he acknowledged. "I'm Dan Frazer. I suppose it won't do any good to tell you why I'm coming to Mesa Verde. You probably won't believe anything I say, now that you've become suspicious of me. Just put it that I'm the kind of fellow who always wants to see what's just over the mountain. In this case I think I'll happen to find anything very pleasant—at least not for the unfortunate man in the coach.

They rode in silence again, all three of them deep in their own thoughts with only Pete making uneasy muttering sounds as he fretted over the trouble which had come to his stage line. Frazer had an uneasy suspicion that he could have answered at least one of the questions that were puzzling the little driver. He thought he knew why the seemingly unprovoked murder had been committed. He knew that he would not be able to verify his suspicion until he could identify the dead man, but it was abundantly clear that he would have to be constantly on guard until he could make sure. Unless he was very wrong about it, there was a bald hint of danger on the rocky trail.

The thought preceded sight of Mesa Verde by only a matter of minutes. They rounded a low hill and came upon the first of perhaps two score adobe and frame houses. Mesa Verde was still little more than a mining camp, but the dead man it at an air of permanence which few western towns of its size and age could match. Chiefly, however, it was plain ugly.

Frazer remembered his purpose and his role. "Who's the law here?" he asked Miss Bartoli. "Do you have a sheriff or just a town marshal?"

"A marshal," she replied promptly. "I'm afraid we have not yet arrived at the dignity of any more formal government. Border towns are likely to be that way, you know."

"I hope the marshal is a good officer," he remarked quickly. "This is something more than a mere killing we're going to dump in his lap. He'll need to be a sort of detective as well as a peace officer."

"No such luck," she retorted. "He's a man by the name of Carson Emery and his idea of being a town marshal is to always have the jump on anybody who brings a gun into town. I'm afraid the only detective work we'll see will be a lot of scurrying around to see who wasn't in town this afternoon."

Frazer nodded easily, content with the girl's reaction. He had somewhat more respect for Carson Emery than that, but he was pleased that Miss Bartoli had accepted his ignorance as genuine. She had spotted his assumed indifference as to suspect that he knew a great many things about Mesa Verde.

There was time for Frazer to get a pretty good mental picture of Mesa Verde before the stagecoach rattled to its destination. The picture was neither usual nor particularly prepossessing. Mesa Verde was a typical border mining town. There was a sizable frame building whose sign proclaimed it to be the hardware store of one Derek Bartoli. Next to it was a restaurant of some size but rather dubious appearance. Two hundred yards beyond was the hotel which seemed to be the terminal for the stage line. These three were the only buildings of more than one story in town, although the only ones not made of adobe bricks. Even the numerous saloons and dance halls were squat mud brick structures.

"You really figure things out, don't you?" Frazer smiled. "Have

Conservation Dept. Tells History of the State-Owned Lakes

By Dept. of Conservation

When the Coffee County managed public fishing lake is opened shortly this county will be among the first in Alabama to have in operation a state-owned recreational lake for its citizens.

Conservation director Earl M. McGowan advises that while 11 are included in the Department of Conservation's program, only those in Butler, Crenshaw and Fayette counties have been opened to date. Another will be opened shortly in neighboring Pike County. Others to open this summer are the Clay, Cullman and Marion lakes with Lemar, Macon and Spelinger lakes scheduled next summer.

Coffee's lake will be the largest with its 80 acres of water surface. The dam is approximately 1,100 feet long and backs up the water about one and one-half miles. The depth of water at the dam is 23 feet. Stocked scientifically with bass and bream, it should afford fine fishing.

For the benefit of swimmers a bench has been provided. Five concrete table-bench combinations have been built as well as three open door fireplaces.

daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Synmonds, and is Elba High School's music teacher. She has been in Europe studying music for a year under some of the great masters.

Yesterday morning at 2 o'clock at Shaw's still, 6 miles North of New Brockton, Daniel C. Hutchison was killed by a Negro, E. M. Lewis. Mr. Hutchison was in the act of arresting the negro, who was wanted in Georgia and Mississippi on serious charges. The negro shot Mr. Hutchison with a single barrel shotgun, hitting him in the shoulder, and also struck him over the head with the gun. Mr. Hutchison shot the negro after he was wounded, the negro dying almost immediately. Mr. Hutchison lived only a few minutes after being shot. It is believed by some that the wife of Lewis hit the leg on the head. She 1 in jail charged with being a party to the killing. Mr. Hutchison's funeral will be held today at Russell cemetery, North of Clantonville. Mr. Hutchison was one of the finest young men in the county. He leaves a wife, five children, father and mother, Capt. and Mrs. N. O. Hutchison; a sister, Mrs. John Dunnivant; three brothers, W. D. F. T. and R. G. Hutchison.

Jean Meacham Weds Gregory Peterson

In an impressive ceremony on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the home of the bride's parents, Miss Jean Meacham, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Charles M. Meacham of Curtis, became the bride of Joe Gregory Peterson of Columbus, Ga., son of Mr. & Mrs. James Peterson.

The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. O. M. Fox, pastor of the Elba Baptist Church, before an altar improvised in the living room. Standard baskets of white asters and white gladioli flanked by candles completed the bridal setting in the traditional grand and white color note.

A program of nuptial music was presented by James Patterson, pianist, and Mrs. Roy D. Fuller, vocalist. Mrs. Fuller sang "This Day is Mine" and "Pearly Prayer" accompanied by Mrs. R. E. Williams of Kinston, Miss Jean Donaldson, niece of the bride and Miss Jo Donaldson, wearing identical dresses of blue and white, carried the bride and groom down the aisle. The bride wore a dress of white tulle and lace with a white orchid corsage. The groom wore a tuxedo with a white orchid boutonniere. The bride's bouquet was of white gladioli and white carnations. The bride's hair was styled in a white satin pillow. The bride's veil was of white tulle and lace. The bride's shoes were of white satin. The bride's gloves were of white satin. The bride's jewelry was of white diamonds. The bride's ring was of white diamonds. The bride's veil was of white tulle and lace. The bride's shoes were of white satin. News From Kinston

(By Mrs. Rayford Stephens)

C. R. Rhoades, N. W. Rhoades, Mr. & Mrs. W. C. Rhoades and daughter, Mary Helen, visited their sister and aunt, Mrs. Dorothy Chambers, who is receiving treatment in Hubbard's hospital in Montgomery, Sunday.

The wedding was a pretty but simple ceremony at the home of Pastor and Mrs. O. M. Fox, pastor of the Elba Baptist Church.

The bride chose for her wedding a navy cheer with white accessories. Her corsage was of shasta daisies.

Miss Lorene Fowler of the groom, were the only attendants. Following the wedding they returned to the home of the bride for lunch which members of both families and a number of friends attended.

Later in the afternoon the couple left for a short wedding trip to Panama City, Fla. Mrs. Collier is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Goodson and Mr. Collier is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George Collier, Sr., of the Brooklyn community.

Murder...

found the decomposed remains. As the crime was committed in Covington County, Sheriff M. C. Meredith took charge of Miles and lodged him in the Covington County jail. Thus the case was ended, so far as Sheriff Tillman is concerned.

Sheriff Tillman said Hill owned a number of rental properties in Roberta and had collected the rent and was supposed to have had a considerable amount of money on his person, and it is thought Miles' motive for killing him was robbery and to get possession of the car. The wreck near Wise's store interferred with his plans.

Hill was a Rawford County, Ga., farmer. A former resident of Covington, Ga., Miles had been working at Roberta, Ga. He told Officers that he and Hill had driven to Gannett in Hill's car on a fishing trip.

Assisting Sheriff Tillman of Coffee, Meredith of Covington and O'Neal of Crawford County, Sgt. Howard Bray and Cpl. C. D. Levertett of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, W. P. Foreman, Alcoholic Beverage Control agent assigned to the Covington County area, and Chief Deputy Ga. in the investigation were Johnny Baldwin and Deputy Harvey Wilson, of Sheriff Meredith's force.

et and rushed outside. I sat on a log and ate my dinner. I noticed none of the other kids were eating but I just figured their parents weren't able to fix them a lunch.

When the next bell rang, I gathered up my bookbag and dinner pail and headed for the farm. When I got home Ma and Pa gave me a good scolding and informed me that I had eaten dinner at recess and had come home at dinner time.

I finally finished high school with the help of the Lord and Mama's fine tater tarts. Papa told me it meant a lot to have a diploma, but he says, "Son, you can't eat it, and times are pretty rough now." I found out what he meant. This was back in 1934 when a silver dollar looked like a log cart wheel, and the hit tune of the day was, "Let Hoover lead you, and let the Welfare Feed You." The going was plenty tough.

We lived in a little log house with a swamp on one side and two swamps on the other. I've always heard that plenty of fresh air was healthy and if that is true, Papa sure raised a healthy bunch of youngsters. The wind would sound like a P-38 as it whistled through the cracks between the logs. Each morning as the sun started peeping over the hills I'd be peeping back at it over my old grey mule. That old mule is dead now, bless her old soul and I hope she's in a better home than that old neighborhood where we wandered back and forth so many times. During the depression times were hard for our family but alone about 1935 I heard Papa tell Mama that he knew times were getting better because he saw a rabbit cross the road and there wasn't but three men after him. I ate so much crackling bread during the depression that I always will believe that's why my feet were so cracked on the bottom and my wife
